Tips to keep away the “Marder”

There have been many cases of animals eating electrical and rubber hosing in engine compartments of vehicles here in the Baumholder community. The main culprit is a rodent called a "Marder"

If anyone has experienced this type of problem here are a number of options and none of them have a written guarantee:

- 1) Some car parts stores sell a repellant spray for around 5 Euros
- 2) Some automotive garages have a high tone sensor/siren which is sensitive to an animal ear that can be installed for around 50 Euros
- 3) Some people place a close net wire meshing under the engine compartment on the ground at night which seems to keep animals away from the engine compartment since they tend to get their claws stuck in the mesh.
- 4) Other home remedies include hanging a toilette bowl deodorizer or dog hair in a sock in the engine compartment. Make sure you have a mechanic show you how and where to secure these items so that you do not get hurt or damage you vehicle.

Again this list is not a “cure” but only a list of possible actions that “might” stop the “Marder” from damaging the wires and hoses in you vehicles engine compartment.
